But soon her step is lagging, and again her eyes are reddened, and she returnd to order—sliced ham.

The trouble, Miss Straus advises, is that the young women of this day and age, are too much taken up with a proved interesting sport to a num-gin, hand in hand, to travel life's rough road, the inexperienced house-keeper calls at the corner butcher shop and timidly orders—sliced ham. Next day she calls again, and her voice is stronger as she orders—sliced ham. For thirty days she comes and orders—sliced ham. Then one morning she appears with reddened eyes, and when she quavers—sliced ham—the butcher, knowing the story life is dinner.
